AUGUSTA, GA – News release from Department of Juvenile Justice

Georgia Department of Juvenile Justice Commissioner L. Gale Buckner today announced that DJJ staff members across the state have collected hundreds of pounds of warm clothing to be donated to women and children who have been victims of domestic violence.

Since Nov. 26th, DJJ staff members from around the state have collected new or gently-used clothing for this new, first-ever initiative. Some facilities were so overwhelmed with donations that they had to arrange for early drop-offs to shelters in their communities.

All drop-offs will be complete by January 9th. "In these difficult economic times, more families in our communities are finding themselves in need of help," said DJJ Commissioner L. Gale Buckner.

"With this clothing drive, we at DJJ hope to help those in need as well as raise youth and staff awareness about domestic violence and encourage our youth to have empathy toward others who are in need."
